

CEREDIGION (VC46)
RARE PLANT REGISTER

1. Vascular Plants and Stoneworts

A O Chater
February 2001

INTRODUCTION

The present edition of this Register updates the last one of April 1997, and includes two major changes in format. Only records since 1970, rather than 1950, are now included, and in the Appendix all natives believed to have become extinct since 1800, rather than 1950, are given and all their sites are listed.

The history of the Register from its inception in 1978 by D Glyn Jones (then the NCC's Assistant Regional Officer in Ceredigion) and A O Chater (BSBI County Recorder) has been related in previous editions. The original format, refined chiefly by A D Fox and A P Fowles, was extensively revised for the 1995 edition by A D Hale (CCW's Area Ecologist). This Register is now complemented by one for bryophytes (Hale 2001).

Data sorting and formatting were carried out by A D Hale using the 'Excel' computer spreadsheet package. The data are retained in this package to facilitate updating for future editions. The spreadsheet can also be used in a limited way as a 'searchable' database, and the data can be sorted in various ways other than by species name (eg by site name or site status). Consideration was given to using the species recording database package Recorder, but Excel was preferred in this instance for presentational reasons as the main aim was to produce an easily accessible and disseminable hard-copy version. The Register has also been put onto the Mapinfo GIS held by CCW, and it is hoped that the site details presented on the GIS will soon be further refined.

Two chief categories of records are included in the Register: 1) nationally threatened, localised and protected species, including Nationally Scarce species, defined according to the lists in Hodgetts, Palmer & Wigginton (1996), along with the Key Species for Biodiversity in the UK, defined according to the lists in Anon. (1996); and 2) species occurring in 3 or fewer "Wells sites" (see definition in Legend). Hieracium is included in the latter category, but not the apomictic species of Rubus and Taraxacum as their distributions in Ceredigion are still inadequately known. Several other categories are included to make the Register more useful: 3) uncommon species not in the above categories but nevertheless useful as habitat indicators or otherwise of special interest in Ceredigion; 4) some of the rarer hybrids about which information is available; 5) the rarer subspecies; and 6) naturalised species of particular interest provided their habitats are reasonably permanent. Native species (and a few archaeophytes, i.e. species introduced into Britain before 1500) believed to have become extinct since 1800 are included in an Appendix.

It cannot be too strongly emphasised that most of the sites listed in this Register are on private land and should not be visited without permission from the owners or tenants. Many of the localities for rare plants in Ceredigion are notified as Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI) and, in order to maintain the good relationships between the owners and CCW, the District Officers for Ceredigion should be consulted at the West Wales Area Office of CCW at Aberystwyth (Tel: 01970 821100) before any of these sites are visited. Now that the collection of rare plants is largely a thing of the past, the chief threat to the species in this Register is from unwitting destruction of their habitats. The more that landowners and other informed and sympathetic people are aware of the local and national interest of these sites, the more chance there should be that the species listed here will be appreciated and will survive, or even become common enough to be removed from future editions of the Register.

Details of most of the records summarised in the Register, including acknowledgements to the many recorders, can be found in the numbers of the BSBI Welsh Bulletin.

IMPLICATIONS FOR CONSERVATION

The degree to which the nationally threatened, localised and protected species in Ceredigion are represented in formally conserved and statutory sites remains much as in the 1997 edition. Of the 142 RDB, Nationally Scarce and 3-site Ceredigion species, 69% are currently in statutorily conserved sites (NNRs or SSSI).

Our RDB species now number three. Only one, Trichomanes speciosum, is in a statutorily conserved site, its sporophyte occurring in a NNR; its gametophyte however is known from 36 sites (12 of which are statutorily conserved, and four more are on National Trust land), but doubtless occurs in many more. The sites for Limonium britannicum and Ranunculus tripartitus are currently unprotected.

Our Nationally Scarce species now number 33, one more than in 1997, and 76% of them occur in statutorily protected sites (although only 48% of the actual sites in which they occur are statutorily conserved, a drop of 2% following on the previous drop of 7%). It should be noted that the Register can give an over-optimistic view of how well some species are being protected, as it does not indicate the size of populations, and because where NNR or SSSI are indicated, much of the population may be outside the conserved area (as with Asplenium septentrionale, where at Cwmsymlog a thousand plants, or 77% of the population, are outside the SSSI).

The recent notification of the Afon Teifi and several of its tributaries as an SSSI has improved the protection status of several Nationally Scarce species, and three of the eleven sites for Rorippa islandica are now included. Seven other Nationally Scarce species have no statutory protection. The most important of these is perhaps Sibthorpia europaea, whose three Ceredigion sites are its most northerly sites in Britain and all are vulnerable. Of the others, Circaea alpina is the most important but its single site is not under threat, Erodium moschatum and Silene gallica are in three sites each, and Gymnocarpium robertianum (well looked after by the Forestry Commission), Melittis melissophyllum (orphaned as Coed Cwm-du is no longer a WTWW Reserve) and Thlaspi caerulescens are in one each.

Of the other rare, 3-site (but not Nationally Scarce) species not in any formally conserved sites, the most significant are Antennaria dioica, Asplenium viride, Carex pseudocyperus, Cladium mariscus, Cuscuta epithymum, Neottia nidus-avis, Ranunculus sardous, Rosa obtusifolia, R. rubiginosa and R. stylosa. Crepis paludosa is now in an SSSI. Some of these species, though, are common in other parts of Britain, and it is species that are nationally or globally rare, but disproportionately common in Ceredigion, that are probably the most important for us to conserve. These include most notably the RDB or Nationally Scarce species Asplenium septentrionale, Elatine hexandra, Hypericum undulatum, Isoetes echinospora, Luronium natans, Orobanche hederaceae, O. rapum-genistae, Rorippa islandica and Sedum forsterianum, as well as other species not on these lists such as Vicia orobus. One plant on the Scarce Species list, Euphrasia rostkoviana subsp. rostkoviana, is actually too widespread in Ceredigion for it to be practical to list all its sites. The same happily applies to several Key Species for Biodiversity: Hyacinthoides non-scripta, Ulex gallii, Ranunculus hederaceus and the Teifi and Aeron sites for Ranunculus penicillatus subsp. penicillatus.

The 1970 cut-off date for records in this Register conceals the extent of some of the losses. Antennaria dioica is now in only one site, but between 1800 and 1970 had been recorded from at least a dozen other sites. There are, however, few other cases as bad as this. Increased recording in recent decades makes it difficult to be certain which species have declined; as an example, Vicia orobus had been recorded for 16 tetrads before 1950 and for 23 since.

STONEWORTS

These are included in the same style as the vascular plants, and further information can be found in Stewart (1977, 1999) and in Stewart & Church (1992).

EXTINCT SPECIES

Ceredigion is fortunate in having lost fewer of its good sites and species than many other counties of Britain. Using the criteria of Preston (2000), whereas Cambridgeshire has lost 13% of its native species, and Middlesex 18%, Ceredigion has lost only 4% (and this is probably an overestimate).

Of the seven species in the 1997 Register believed to have become extinct in Ceredigion since 1950, Valeriana dioica has now been found in an entirely new site. The list of extinct species has been extended in the present Register to include all natives believed to have become extinct since recording began, in effect since 1800. In many ways this list is unsatisfactory, as some of the original records were doubtful and were often inadequately localised. Parnassia and Silene conica may well never have occurred here, and the record of Rorippa microphylla is minimal in every respect. The one really significant extinction of a native species is that of Gentianella campestris, gone from 16 sites presumably at least partly because of the loss or deterioration of good semi-natural habitats. Dianthus armeria and Pilularia, the former RDB and the latter Nationally Scarce as well as a Key Species for Biodiversity, have been lost for reasons unknown, as one site for each remains much as it was when the species occurred there. Blysmus rufus, Paris and Viola reichenbachiana are among those especially worth trying to refind as their sites too remain largely unchanged.

STATISTICAL SUMMARY

Summary of records of vascular plants as natives of Nationally Scarce and RDB species, and of those species occurring as natives in three or fewer Wells sites in Ceredigion. (The numerous records of the still under-recorded Euphrasia rostkoviana subsp. rostkoviana, the Trichomanes speciosum gametophyte, and Hieracium, Rubus and Taraxacum microspecies are omitted from these statistics.)

Total species (as defined above)	142
Species in formally conserved sites	103 (73%)
Species in statutory sites (SSSI, NNR)	98 (69%)
Nationally Scarce species	33
NS species in formally conserved sites	26 (79%)
NS species in statutory sites	25 (76%)
RDB species	3
RDB species in statutory sites	1 (33%)
Wells sites of all species	344
Wells sites in formally conserved sites	193 (56%)
Wells sites in statutory sites	178 (52%)
Wells sites of Nationally Scarce species	131
Wells sites of NS species in formally conserved sites	66 (50%)
Wells sites of NS species in statutory sites	63 (48%)
Native species believed to have become extinct since 1800	27
Ditto since 1950	14
Ditto since 1970	7

Of the 769 species currently extant in Ceredigion as natives, about 660 (86%) occur in NNRs or SSSIs.
